L.G. has been working on cytosolic Ca^{2+} signaling for many years and the experimenters of the Laboratory of the Phosphoinositides are most indebted to him for having demonstrated that Ca^{2+} release from the endoplasmic reticulum induces a small decrease of cytosolic Ca^{2+} in the absence of IP₃-R activation in H9C2 cells (1 and 2). E.C. was the first to show that the IP₃-R can be activated by IP₃ in the cytosol in cultured smooth muscle cells and heart cells. He went on to study Ca^{2+} dynamics in Purkinje cells in Xenopus oocytes, cardiac and smooth muscle cells. T.H.G. was also one of the first to monitor transmembrane Ca^{2+} influxes evoked by excitation. The Laboratory of the Phosphoinositides is grateful to Jean-Claude Duby for his exceptional work on the ultrastructure of giant synapses in the 1990s. He is now a professor at the Electron Microscopy (EM) Department of the Institut Curie in Paris. K.D. holds the Chair of Cellular and Molecular Ca^{2+} Signalling in Cardiac Diseases and is a member of the Cardiovascular Research Institute Maastricht, an Interuniversity Cardiology Institute. Together with his collaborators, he developed the cardiomyocyte microfluorimetric technique for measuring both cardiac sarcoplasmic reticulum (SR) Ca^{2+} stores and cytosolic Ca^{2+} ([@b17]). B.M. was a post-doctoral researcher of Louis Gachon (LGBio) in Ca^{2+} signaling at the Pasteur Institute, who, together with J.D. Beazard, showed that a transient sustained increase in cytosol 570a42141b
