The development of theranostic theranostic nanoparticles for tumor-targeting therapy is of critical importance in cancer therapy. A multifunctional theranostic nano-agent is introduced here that is prepared by coupling gold nanoparticles (AuNPs) with a dual-functional amphiphilic polymer (AP) and glycyrrhizic acid (GA). GA functions as a targetable ligand, and the combination of GA and AP can significantly enhance the binding affinity of AP toward tumors, with a tumor/non-tumor tissue ratio of approximately 2.5:1. This dual-functionalized theranostic nano-agent, termed AP/AuNPs-GA, can act as a good contrast agent for cancer imaging and therapy. Further experiments demonstrate that it has high stability in vivo. With the high affinity of GA for CD133-overexpressed A549 tumor cells, the nanomaterial is effectively internalized by the cancer cells. The nanomaterial is found to have a high toxicity toward CD133-overexpressed cancer cells and a lower toxicity to non-tumor cells, and the toxicity is further enhanced by the presence of GA. Moreover, in vivo experiments show that the nanomaterial
