This invention relates to a bumper assembly which protects a vehicle and is known to have a bumper which extends forwardly over the frame rails of the vehicle. A first end extends forwardly of the vehicle and is secured to the frame at a point spaced inwardly of the forward bumper. A second end extends rearwardly of the vehicle and is secured to the frame at a point inwardly of the rear bumper. In accordance with the present invention, the first end of the bumper assembly includes a combination of brackets, first bumper strips, secondary bumper strips, and a horizontally extending stiffener. A forward frame rail of the vehicle is extended upwardly along the inside of the first bumper strip, and a transversely extending stiffener is extended along the inside of the secondary bumper strip. A horizontally extending stiffener is then slidably disposed between the first and second bumper strips. The project is a complete entertainment, residential or office development on an unused state property. A new 40,000 sq. ft. home office for a major health company in Central Ohio is under way. Edgewater Family Builders Ltd. of Columbus, a commercial contractor that offers a variety of services, received a state agency permit to build its home office building on the 1.2-acre property in Worthington. Located on the Medical Arts Campus in downtown Worthington, the home office is part of a larger planned development that will include a multi-building and townhouse residential community. "The idea for this home office was to have an industrial look," said Dan Stoeckel, chief executive officer of Edgewater. "We're starting with a two-story office building." He said the new construction will replace a parking lot. The plan is to have just four office suites that face south and open onto the building's covered parking area. The home office is expected to be completed by the end of the year.
