Pulmonary nodule follow-up after stereotactic body radiotherapy using computed tomography and 18F-fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography. The optimal protocol to detect and monitor metastases in patients after stereotactic body radiotherapy (SBRT) of lung lesions is not yet established. We retrospectively evaluated computed tomography (CT) and 18F-fluorodeoxyglucose (FDG) positron emission tomography (PET) in a cohort of 25 patients with lung nodules treated with SBRT. Patients were evaluated at least 6 months after treatment. Chest CT was performed between 1 and 6 months after SBRT. Then, FDG-PET was performed between 6 and 12 months, and then every 6 months. Overall, CT detected 14.5% and PET detected 31% of the clinically suspicious nodules. The overall sensitivity of PET was 50% for small nodules (10-15 mm) compared to 25% for large nodules (15-45 mm). FDG PET was helpful in detecting a pulmonary nodule (n = 3) or distant metastasis (n = 3) in an asymptomatic patient. Six out of 22 clinically and radiologically monitored patients developed a pulmonary nodule after a median follow-up of 18 months. All pulmonary nodules were benign and were resected. These nodules did not show significant FDG uptake
